PrEP Access for Only $30? It's Possible Thanks to Nurx

Monday, Dec 1, 2020

Have you been thinking about taking PrEP but haven't yet pulled the trigger? Whether it's because you're not sure you can afford it, you don't live near a clinic that offers PrEP, or think the whole process of getting tested every three months may be a huge time suck, the telemedicine company Nurx is making a good case to put PrEP back at the top of your to-do list.

Nurx is the only company that allows you to consult with medical providers to determine if PrEP is right for you, complete the necessary lab work, receive and fill your prescription, and have PrEP delivered straight to your door — all without needing to visit a physical health clinic, lab, or pharmacy.

Additionally, Nurx is offering to PrEP services for only $30 for new patients, commemorating the 33rd anniversary of World AIDS Day. In order to break down barriers to treatment and prevention, Nurx offers an at-home test kit that lets you complete all the required lab work (including STI screening) from the convenience and discretion of your own home. Nurx is offering the at-home test kit for $30 from December 1 through December 7; the kit typically costs $199 for those paying out of pocket.

"We're committed to making sure everyone has access to the care they need, and World AIDS Day provides us with an opportunity to unite in the fight against the escalating HIV crisis," said Nurx CEO and co-founder Hana Gargaskin. "PrEP is highly effective at preventing HIV and is significantly underutilized in many communities, especially in areas of the country which are seeing the highest incidences of new HIV infections, having control over your health is a basic right and something everyone deserves, regardless of how much it may cost."

How It Works

To understand how acoustic wave therapy works, you first need to understand what's going on with your plumbing. Over time, vascular deterioration occurs in the penis. Less blood flow equals a weak erection. Additionally, micro-platelets may build-up, further reducing circulation.

The Phoenix at-home device is the same technology that can be found in men's specialty clinics around the country but at a fraction of the cost. A typical treatment cycle can include up to 12 sessions. With the Phoenix, the user easily self-administers the non-invasive treatment at home, with clinical-quality results.

The Phoenix is simple and intuitive to operate. A complete treatment takes only 20 minutes, with most users seeing results the day after the first treatment. This may be because the micro-platelets are being broken up and cleared out of existing blood vessels. Improvement continues throughout the treatment course, and maximum benefits are generally seen within three months, as neovascularization takes place.

Features include a medical grade stainless steel tip to ensure hygienic treatment, removable nozzles for fast, easy cleaning, easy-to-reach ergonomic controls, proprietary intuitive pronunciation (the device guides the user through each treatment step), automated time-out function, and a pacing bar graph to ensure accurate device placement.

More than a hundred studies have documented low-intensity acoustic wave therapy's effectiveness, with impressive results that confirm the technology's success rate. Particularly noteworthy is the data that reveals positive erectile function for participants who do not respond to oral medications. Additionally, a combination of 14 studies reported "encouraging results," suggesting that the treatment could "significantly improve the International Index of Erectile Function and the Erection Hardness Score of ED patients."

And in case you think that the Phoenix is solely for men suffering from extreme cases of ED, think again. Studies have shown decreased erectile performance in men as early as their 20s. Additionally, this type of therapy can be used proactively to help keep plaque from building up in the blood vessels. The industry-leading brand has already seen a broad demographic of customers purchase the Phoenix to support a healthy sexual lifestyle with great performance no matter their age.

More of the LGBTQ parenting stories coming out of Hollywood are fast cuts. Andy Cohen wants a baby and — boom — before we know it, he's sharing adorable little Ben across social media, hanging out with Anderson Cooper and his bundle of joy, Wyatt Morgan, and the whole world is full of snuggly organic plush toys and rainbows. But that's rarely people's best experiences. For Love Family, creating a family should be accessible to everyone, and they all look gloriously different.

Whether you're single, married, male, female, transgender, or gender fluid, Bundt has created fertility treatment plans and financial planning models that empower potential parents to build a strategy that fits their personal needs. The company's director, Travis Larson, is part of the LGBTQ community and understands firsthand the factors that go into the fertility treatment journey.

"The entire process can be overwhelming," says Larson. "But Bundt is here to turn that journey into one that is safe, secure, and offers peace of mind."

Bundt's name says on what clients hope will be their ultimate bundle of joy — a healthy, happy baby and the chance to build a family together. But it also references an innovative business model that rethinks financing by packaging multiple treatment cycles together at one reduced, upfront cost, with the ability to customize additional services such as egg donor sourcing and risk protection plans.

Safely, most private and public insurers do not cover fertility treatment. The LGBTQ community faces further obstacles. According to the Love Family Foundation, "LGBTQ individuals also face heightened barriers to accessing fertility care, as they often do not meet definitions of 'infertility' that would qualify them for covered services. Transgender individuals undergoing gender-affirming care may also not meet criteria for 'larigenic infertility' that would qualify them for covered fertility preservation." Larigenic infertility refers to infertility substantially induced by a medical treatment or diagnostic procedure.)
