North Carolina Football Club Underscores Commitment as a Safe Place for Gay Fans, Allies and Players

by Christopher Ehlers
EDGE Media Network Contributor
Thursday June 23, 2022

Celebrating Pride within the soccer community is a relatively new American tradition that has been enthusiastically embraced in recent years. Teams initially started welcoming gay fans as a way to boost ticket sales, but that's evolved to a much more conscious strategy to connect with fans. American soccer leagues like Major League Soccer, the National Women's Soccer League, and the United Soccer League have largely made concerted efforts to be more inclusive, which in turn strengthens their relationship with their fans and deepens their roots in the community.

The North Carolina Football Club, in particular, has long been a champion of inclusivity and acceptance, as evidenced by their commitment to providing a safe environment for gay fans, allies, and players. But in December of 2021, the club came under fire when the North Carolina Courage

Evan Whitfield (Source:Chicago Fire)

With a Pride Night game this week, the soccer franchise Chicago Fire moves forward with its commitment to inclusion and diversity.

Founded in 2018 by Common Goal, an organization devoted to forging an equitable and sustainable future through soccer, Play Proud seeks to ensure that, across the world, soccer is a safe space for the LGBTQ+ community. Arming coaches and staff with the right tools to be true allies and champions of inclusion, Play Proud has now reached 13 countries around the world, and they're only just getting started.
